

A helping hand

Elaine Almond

NEW CARLISLE : - This couple was spotted cleaning up New Carlisle beach. It is quite surprising to see strangers taking better care of our beaches than we do ourselves.

Johanne and Pierre first came to New Carlisle nine years ago, after falling in love with our area. They have returned every summer since. They belong to a group from the Verdun (Montreal) area who have taken on the responsibility of keeping the area where they take their daily walk, free of litter. Last year they collected 5,000 bags of garbage and recyclable litter. They believe that one person can make a difference.

Thanks to Johanne and Pierre our boardwalk and beach were free of litter for a two-week period this summer. They would be so happy if we could, "Keep up their good work."

For more information visit www.amidesberges.ca